OPINION OF THE COURT

SCIRICA, Chief Judge.

In 2007, Krause Publications, Inc. published two toy train catalogs authored by David Doyle. Paul Ambrose brought a copyright infringement action against Krause and Doyle claiming the catalogs infringed Ambrose's copyrights in toy train catalogs and books he authored (the "Doyle Action"). Within a few months, the parties settled all their claims, and the District Court dismissed the case with prejudice pursuant to the terms of the parties' Confidential Settlement Agreement ("CSA").

At the time of settlement, Ambrose had a separate, but related copyright action pending against the Train Collectors Association and Eastern Division – T.C.A. (collectively, "TCA") (the "TCA Action"). Paragraph 11 of the CSA permitted Ambrose to seek relief from TCA in the TCA Action, "provided, however, that [Ambrose] [would] not seek to collect from [TCA] any judgment on such claims if collection of such judgment or part thereof might foreseeably lead to a claim for indemnification against Krause" Shortly after the CSA was executed, TCA filed a third-party complaint against Krause, asserting claims for indemnification and contribution. Krause then sought leave in the Doyle Action to disclose in the TCA Action the terms of the CSA, and Ambrose simultaneously filed a motion to void the CSA, or, in the alternative, to find Krause in breach thereof.¹ The District Court granted Krause's motion to disclose the CSA and denied Ambrose's motion to void it. TCA and Krause then moved for summary judgment and partial summary judgment, respectively, based on the terms of the CSA. The court granted both motions and entered judgment against Ambrose, finding the CSA barred the TCA Action as a matter of law. We will affirm.²

² The District Court had jurisdiction in both actions under 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331, 1332, 1338, and 1400(a). We have jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1291.

Ambrose filed a motion in the Doyle Action to declare the CSA void at his election and to reopen the Doyle Action because there was no “meeting of the minds” regarding whether Ambrose would be permitted to continue the TCA Action to judgment in the event of an indemnification claim. Although Ambrose did not seek relief under any particular Federal Rule of Civil Procedure, the parties agree his motion was in effect a Rule 60(b) motion for relief from a final judgment.³ Ambrose contends he set forth “mutual and/or unilateral mistake that was known to both parties,”⁴ and that the District Court abused its discretion by denying his motion without holding a hearing, allowing discovery, or issuing findings of fact and conclusions of law.⁵

The District Court’s dismissal of Ambrose’s motion was not an abuse of discretion under the circumstances of this case. Rule 52(a)(3) provides the court is not required to state findings or conclusions when ruling on a motion unless the rules provide otherwise,

³ Ambrose contends his motion was a Rule 60(b)(3) motion for relief from a final judgment for fraud, misrepresentation, or misconduct, while Krause contends the motion was brought pursuant to Rule 60(b)(1) for relief for mistake. Ambrose’s sole argument for voiding the CSA was that there was no “meeting of the minds” with respect to paragraph 11. Ambrose contended the parties had “substantial conflicting understandings of the contractual language contained in Paragraph 11.” Because Ambrose’s motion made no mention of fraud, misrepresentation, or misconduct by Krause, we will review the motion under Rule 60(b)(1).

and Rule 60(b) does not do so. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 52(a)(3); Fed. R. Civ. P. 60(b); Delzona Corp. v. Sacks, 265 F.2d 157, 159-60 (3d Cir. 1959) (“Rule 52(a) . . . does not require findings of fact and conclusions of law for cases arising under Rule 60(b).”).

Ambrose’s motion, moreover, failed as a matter of law, and thus did not require resolution of factual issues. Ordinary principles of contract law govern settlement agreements under Pennsylvania law.⁶ Consol. Rail Corp. v. Portlight, Inc., 188 F.3d 93, 96 (3d Cir. 1999). A mistake of one or both parties at the time of contracting may be a valid ground for rescinding a settlement agreement. See id.; Lanci v. Metro. Ins. Co., 564 A.2d 972, 974 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1989). “A mistake is a belief that is not in accord with the facts.” Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 151; see also Consol. Rail Corp., 188 F.3d at 96 (““Mutual mistake exists where both parties to a contract are mistaken as to existing facts at the time of execution.”” (quoting Holt v. Dep’t of Pub. Welfare, 678 A.2d 421, 423 (Pa. Commw. Ct. 1996))).

Ambrose’s argument misunderstands the nature of the mistake doctrine. In his motion to void the CSA, he did not contend that he executed the CSA under a belief that was not in accord with the facts. Instead, Ambrose set forth his interpretation of paragraph 11. Stated differently, Ambrose raised a dispute over the meaning of a particular provision in the CSA. “Disputes over the meaning of a given phrase are common in contract disputes; the presence of such interpretive ambiguity, however, does not go to whether the contract is enforceable, but rather who (the judge or the jury) must decide what the given clause means.” Am. Eagle Outfitters v. Lyle & Scott Ltd., 584 F.3d 585-86 (3d Cir. 2009). “To hold otherwise would improperly transform run-of-the-mill challenges to the interpretation of contractual language into far more significant disputes over contractual enforceability.” Id. at 586. Because Ambrose did not allege a “mistake” that could void the CSA, the District Court did not abuse its discretion by denying his motion.

Ambrose’s dispute over the meaning of paragraph 11 was addressed by the District Court in its grant of summary judgment in favor of TCA, which Ambrose also challenges.⁷ The District Court determined the CSA unambiguously barred the TCA Action as a matter of law once TCA asserted its indemnification claim against Krause.⁸ Ambrose contends paragraph 11 contained ambiguous language because he believed the provision that he would not “seek to collect” any judgment meant “execute” a judgment.

⁷ Our review of an order granting summary judgment is plenary, and we apply the same standard as the District Court. Am. Eagle Outfitters, 584 F.3d at 580-81. Summary judgment should be granted “if the pleadings, the discovery and disclosure materials on file, and any affidavits show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). “All inferences must be drawn in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party.” Am. Eagle Outfitters, 584 F.3d at 581 (citation omitted).

Under Ambrose’s interpretation, he would be permitted to continue the TCA Action to judgment, and only upon judgment would he be prohibited from executing the judgment “if collection . . . might foreseeably lead to a claim for indemnification against Krause.” Ambrose contends the District Court erred by failing to identify this ambiguity and consider the parol evidence he offered.

Ambrose’s argument is without merit. “When a written contract is clear and unequivocal, its meaning must be determined by its contents alone.” Mellon Bank, N.A. v. Aetna Bus. Credit, Inc., 619 F.2d 1001, 1010 (3d Cir. 1980) (citation omitted); Mace v. Atl. Ref. & Mktg. Corp., 785 A.2d 491, 496 (Pa. 2001). A contract is ambiguous if it is reasonably susceptible to different constructions and capable of being understood in more than one sense. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 935 F.2d 1428, 1431 (3d Cir. 1991). Under Pennsylvania law, ambiguous contracts are interpreted by the trier of fact, and unambiguous contracts are interpreted by the court as a matter of law. Mellon Bank, 619 F.2d at 1011 n.10. We agree with the District Court’s conclusion that paragraph 11 unambiguously barred Ambrose from obtaining any judgment from TCA once the indemnification claim was asserted.⁹ Accordingly, we will affirm the judgment of the District Court.¹⁰

TCA contends its third-party complaint against Krause contained state law claims distinct from its claims for indemnification and contribution. We have reviewed the third-party complaint. The only claims asserted are for indemnification and contribution.
